ATHENS - Americans like the Greek food - but easy on the olive oil and garlic, please! Oil, staple food diet of Greeks since the days of Pericles 2,500 years ago, finds the way into aimost anything and everything here, from salad to dessert.

The American housewife looking here for something to prepare at home in the way of a Greek menu looks at the liberal quantities of olive oil prescribed in the recipes and quickly tries to figure some way of getting around it.

It can be done, but not with American style butter, which the housewife uses in her cooking back in the United States. The best substitutes are vegetable oil and margarine-type shortening. The Greeks frown on these. Transplanted Americans here-whose numbers have run as high as 4,000 at a single time during the past six years of American economic and military aid administration in this country - generally have developed a fondness for the Greek cuisine, although professional cooks don't regard it as Greek. says of her recent experience in baking a White Laver cake made Mrs. Tucker's Shortening: "It was a joy to use Mrs. Tucker's because it was so white and creamy and blended magically into my batter. My cake rurned out beautifully and was wonderfully rich, light and tasty. I am glad to recommend Mrs. Tucker's to women who are inserested in baking

"I was amazed to learn of Mrs. Tucker's cake baking guarantee which pays that if you don't agree that your cake is better than any take you ever baked before, using ANY other kind of shortening then all you do is send the recipe to Mrs. Tucker's Homemakers Department, Sherman, Texas, telling what you didn't like about the cake, and Mrs. Tucker will repay you for all the ingredients used, PLUS a dollar for your baking time. I believe that is the strongest guarantee made by any shortening
